Although a link between Birmingham City Council and a private developer has been in the pipeline since June, details about the project, including when the public will be told about it, has never been revealed. The project involves the land around the NEC Birmingham being used to create new business centres, as well as housing. The council said in June that a partnership between Lend Lease, Barratt Homes and CH Properties will allow the homes on the land, close to the NEC and Birmingham rail and tram stations, to be sold at or below the Government's minimum affordable price. With the help of a housing charity, West Midlands Strategic Housing Group, CH Properties, which owns the land, will pay £10 million in return for 1,588 flats. This is in addition to the council's long-term plans for the site, including the construction of
